

STRUGGLE

“In year 1642, as they date it, the course of history changed drastically. The Dawn After Dusk, we call it now after all these years. It began with a group of three or four people, maybe less maybe more, the exact number eludes us now in the fog of this dusty history and ongoing dispute.

The thing happened still awes us to this day, if I am to be perfectly honest. It was finding a needle, losing it thousand times and finding it again in the middle of a hay. One innovator, one who can swing anything he took in his hand, one miserable thief and one who broke The Illusion was all that it took to make it happen. The last one is the subject of the ongoing dispute. But that is another story, for another time. Focus on this one for now, child.

Surely, you’ve heard shapeshifters, or the name Karaneme; this is the story of our first successful Rebellion, our gamechanger, our Return, our Glory Revisited and they, they are the enemy. The first and the last enemy.”

An episode from Mustafa oğlu Gökhan’s Diary, written for and inherited by his son, Gökhan oğlu Murat.

STRUGGLE

What is Struggle which gives its name to the setting? Although popularized after the Rebellion of First Yurt, it has been a fire ever-burns throughout the ages of humanity. Only for them to carry and entrust to future generations.

It is possible to define Struggle as an “urge” that all people; men, women and children feel profoundly. All these years under neme occupation and yet not one camp nor any collective human movement nor any religion nor ideology, deliberately went out of their way to humanity to defy themselves, even after centuries, the fight continues against neme. It is the very thing towards the resistance and continuation of mankind as a moral being, not only as another species of animal. A series of Q&A would help better understand the nature of it.

When did Struggle begin? Whenever the first man had stridden the earth and maybe even before. Some claim it was engrained into humanity’s very being. Some say that it was a gift from the Almighty. If there would be only one society of mankind left in the earth, there would still be Struggle, if one man would have been left in the earth, Struggle would still kindle. It is a fire that burns thanks to every and each person and it is meaningless and “maybe” non-existent without humanity. The only thing that we are certain for know that it is for humanity.

Is Struggle known? Is it named as “Struggle”? In truth, no, it is not defined or known as a concept. Struggle is both the ebb and flow of life and it is everything that concerns the ebb and flow, which eventually leads to culture, traditions, laws, lore, ideology and actions of humanity. So humanity doesn’t actually know it but rather coexists, and in mutual interaction with it.

Is Struggle an ideology? Definitely not. Struggle may be interpreted and defined with different ideas, may give birth and pave the way for the creation of certain ideologies—for example, a man who feels Struggle much more violently than others may introduce an ideology like militarism, or if one feels Struggle towards one’s own sins and greed may lead to some self-discipline movement—but it is much, much more profound than any ideology.

Can neme feel Struggle? For this question to be answered, Humanity first must comprehend the true meaning and nature of Struggle. So it is a question yet to be asked.

Is Struggle a movement of philosophy or is it some kind of religion? No. But it is definitely philosophical and has a religious aspect in its core. It concerns phenomenological ontology. The very “existence of man” is the prerequisite of Struggle, but it is not an movement produced by the minds or hearts of mankind. It is like a religion that is introduced to them by God.

Instinctively, every man has a brush with The Struggle, yet only few awakened it to its true potential, and they are not yet aware of what it can do if it is controlled thoroughly.

For game masters, Struggle is a recurring theme that is always to be used in any kind of campaign in The Struggle setting and its future versions, as a never-ending desire of humanity –to survive, obtain, conquer, rule over and, to kill; but also to nourish, feed, love, sacrifice and live— despite every dire condition and consequence.

LAND OF WAR/DÂR'ÛL-HARB

The Campaign of 1642 is at best, a campaign of horror, misery, war and scrape a living. You have to make the best of your abilities, your tools and more importantly, choices. You will try again and probably will fail a few times before you even get the “good ending” of it. What we’re trying to present you here is an experience of souls-like TTRPG campaign. So, for now, forget about those mighty paladins who fight against the apostles of Evil. Here is a quick rundown for you to know where to begin with...

This is not an anthropocentric world you are living in. This is a world of Neme. Here, they are the rulers, they control the tide, they set the rules, they invent the paradigms. Mankind is merely an object, nothing more. Neme have their own hierarchical structures, authorities, superior-subordinate relationship, military, states, religions, ideologies. Also another story for another time.

On the other hand, humanity is a slave-race since times unknown by the creatures called karaneme; the shapeshifters, the flesh-sculptors. They are depraved of everything. Food is scarce, water is only given as much as needed, even less sometimes. Men are used as tools for mining valuable resources from the bosom of The Earth and if they are lucky, sometimes as muscle power or technicians; women, on the other hand, breeding tools for the next generation of slaves.

In a lifetime, women may breed ten, twenty or –if they are lucky— more children. Those women are left alone by karanemes. The next generation of man-slaves are more important then of present, obviously. Usually, this application does not end up with overpopulation of mankind because heavy loads of work, years of torture and undernutrition made impossible for them to live a long life, and that is the reason why women may breed eight to ten children at the very least. Or there will be no way to reproduce and survive.

But in some cases where women breed more, man are healthier by some blind luck and they somehow manage to “thrive”, it raises some questions in the ranks of neme. If some If they are to live and overpopulate, then the regulations are in order to fix the miscalculations.

THE REGULATIONS/ZAMAN-I HARB

“Where was I? Yes, The Regulations as they call it and may their name be cursed with their sugarcoated terms. It was massacre. They were afraid. Fuckin’ karaneme, afraid they were. In their hearts, we saw their fears, and in their fears, we saw our potential, and in our potential, we thrived. They were not regulations. They were Zaman-i Harb.”

(A neme fucks a woman, breeds with her, births an abomination, the woman, neme and the infant is killed, then in a state of paranoia –since now it is known that is possible to interbreed— mankind breeds much more than usual, it is understood rather late that they bred too much and now humanity is overpopulated, then first regulation occurs, at first, neme are undisciplined and they actually have no idea how to effectively erase a camp, problems occur, then solved, then occur again)

An unrecorded piece of information is brought to a camp by an ulak and since that time, it is rarely spoken. According to the info, a karaneme and

In many such cases of those regulations, mankind response. And they response violently. Even the best working method to spy them by shapeshifting does not work well on times like regulations.

INCIDENT OF CAMP 81/REBELLION OF THE FIRST YURT

Once, a leader of a “response” was killed, a karaneme infiltrated the leader’s family as his wife killed him in his sleep. Next day, every member of the leader’s family were lynched, beaten to death by a swarm of men. His three “wives”, which one of them was a neme, grandmother who is already 51 years old, 13 children, ages ranging from 5 to 24 were all trampled under the punches kicks and stomps. Then, the lynchers immediately declared a new leader and stroke back, killing 8 nemes, yet they suffered immense losses, hundreds of people died in the “battle” and later all of the camp was executed. This was the first incident that a Regulation is “won” if one can say so, thanks to it, in times of Regulation, spying does not do anything because humanity don’t wait, plan or think, they know that only way out is through so they simply attack. They punch. If you cut their arms, they kick, if you cut their legs, they bite, if you take their jaw out, they headbutt. There is no end of that massacre until one side is completely erased. The news of such determination sent shockwaves throughout the ranks of neme. Then somehow, like always, the word got out. Other camps found out about what happened and Regulation battles have turned into a tradition of sorts.

But karaneme is not stupid, they learned their lesson after some time. Now, if a Regulation is on the way, the order is issued quickly and executed immediately. Whole thing happens in three nights. All of the spies of karaneme among the human camps are left to their fate for it would attract unwanted attention for some people to just “vanish” without a trace. It may signal the upcoming Regulation. In first trials, they didn’t think of it so they retracted all of the spies. Mankind, understanding that there will be a Regulation soon and they decided to start it themselves... and consequences were harsh.

Our campaign is taking place on the verge of a Regulation process, it is only matter of days Karaneme will attack, so tension rises with each night. Humans, knowing that there are still spies among them, they sleep by turns. Lynching nemes that try to slip through their inevitable fate by leaving the camp at night.

Note for Storyteller/DM/GMs: Sooner or later you will understand that the book involves heavy application of thesis, antithesis and synthesis—like the binaries of calling the same event two different things—and the characters or plot will reveal those thesis/antithesis/synthesis to you one by one. For example, Fourth of July may be your Day of Independence, or it can invoke different emotions if you are an indigenous. Since the discourse is everything and it shapes our vision of the world and carries the doctrines and ideas with it, you will be introduced with various perspectives and paradigms. Such as camp/yurt or regulation/zaman-ı harb... You are warned.

Humanity is herded in camps, they are bred in camps, they usually work in camps, and they die in camps, yurt as they call it which literally means “home”. Camps are filthy places with near zero organization, yet never truly zero (Sütanalık and other “structures” will extend on the organization of camps). Camps are crowded and one always have to fight for a piece of bread or drop of water. It was not given to them in order, but like one feeding pigeons in a city center. Karaneme will usually just throw the bread and be entertained with turmoil. Sometimes and often, murder occurs, and rarely, to their “mercy”, karaneme will reward the human with a piece of meat as the prize of the entertainment. Camps, unsurprisingly, stink; an amalgam smell of blood, manure and sweat always hangs in the air. There is always a weeping sound coming from whether a mother shedding tears over a dead child or an infant crying for mother’s milk. A valuable resource as it gives power even to weakest of men, mother’s milk is scarce and only given to children unless sometimes, when desperate times call for desperate measures given to men... Mothers are usually dry of milk or it is a matter of time for them to go dry, so there are milk-mothers (sütana/sütanne), valued and protected by whatever means necessary. If a sütanne wants bread, it is given, if water, even spits of every men and women in a yurt are in their service. They are holy and pure in the eyes of mankind. The reason they are untouched by karaneme is that they breed well and produce the next generation of slaves, as it was told before.

SÜTANALIK

Although they are not the authority of yurts, a sütana’s word carries significant influence through the camp and Sütanalık as a quasi-structure is protected by all costs. Men, children and women may fall in battles for even one of them. The first one, named Umay established its traditions centuries ago. There were always mothers whose bodies were able to produce milk but then, Umay ascended it into a religious state of being.

As the story goes, one night after her children killed each other over a loaf of bread in those feeding pits, Umay cried. And she cried until there were no tears left in her dry eyes. Then she cried tears of milk and blood. Seeing her children in such miserable state, Umay, after all those tears realized all of her yurt is in the same condition. Feeling as a hypocrite, she gouged her eyes with her own hands saying “Yurt itself is my child, or none. From this day, I will cry for the yurt itself, or for none.” symbolizing she will not, ever again, cry for the ones only she nursed, but for everyone and after that day she did not discriminate between the children of yurt. As a symbolic way of proving that all yurt is their child, sütanas today still gouge their eyes, letting the blood fall down from their breasts and the man who is fed blood from their breast becomes their one and only man, koca. This is a practice later added by Umay as a precaution of inbreeding. During her lifetime, Umay paved the way for other sütannes. Creating a legacy of traditions and rites as it follows;

RITE OF PASSAGE AND TRADITION OF UMay

Thou shalt choose one man's hand

Thou shall be blinded by thy own doing, making no distinctions between the children of Yurt
Thou shalt recite The Oath: “Yurt itself is my child, or none. From this day, I will cry for the Yurt itself, or for none.”

Thou shalt feed your koca your eyes' blood from your breast

Thou shalt not let go of your koca until death do you part

Thou shalt not breastfeed your koca neither your blood nor your milk ever again

Thou shalt breastfeed every child that is given to you

Thou shalt not take another man as your koca if death claims him

Thou shalt not interact anyway but intercourse with thy koca

Nowadays, sütanas do not leave their tents, usually breastfeeding children that in need of, they are tended by cupbearers functioning as their hands and eyes. Guarded and respected by all, acting as spiritual advisors to the community.

At first, karaneme was the focus of worry in camps, it was not known how they would react to the news since they do not have any sympathy or understanding towards a slave-race. Usually, although rarely, karaneme will have their way with any kind of women or men they want, with the exception of making a woman pregnant. Since a female human being invokes pathetic feelings in them, interbreeding is out of the question, a neme who commits the crime of interbreeding will suffer most dire consequences by his superiors, or even, subordinates, since it is now even less than a human. Men are born men, women are born women, slaves are slaves, they cannot choose since they don't have the right to choose, neme understand it. Where having an intercourse with a female human is itself like a taboo or sin, choosing to breed with a slave is never understood nor tolerated. So, the problem has been solved before it finds the time even to occur.

“From what I gathered, or whatever left from the supposed diary after all these years, I found some creepy shit about Umay and his first koca. According to the legend or this version of the legend, Umay strangled her own koca in his sleep. In the first days of setting her doctrine, she was under constant stress and unrest, saying that she was afraid and can't sleep at night.

One night, not too much after The Gouging, her cupbearers caught Umay red-handed, strangling her koca and saying “Begone, begone evildoer, cursed be thy name karaneme.” They told —of course— no one about it. Carrying Umay to safety, away from her bed, in the middle of the night and “washing” her with the soil and sand, buried the dead koca or karaneme. Whatever you want to believe, I guess.

Then, the diary suggests that after a week later Umay made some appendages, or “revisions” to her Traditions, adding five more articles. That makes sense if you wanna believe it actually, the last five traditions protect sütanas and block any karaneme to spy on them. One man and one man only. Also, if a karaneme is stupid enough to make a sütana pregnant, I’ll let him be my guest since those bastard would have angered both sides. I don’t know man. Making humanity angry or making karaneme angry? It is already a tough choice, I think they didn’t see any reason to make both sides angry, and that is understandable. Like I said, it makes sense if you wanna believe it, but every lie makes sense if you wanna believe it, so I will not dig deeper on that.

How Umay understood her koca was actually a karaneme actually mentioned in the diary—supposedly written by one of her cupbearers—she says that Umay had this sharp senses of smelling and hearing, making even the tiniest weirdness in odors or voices clear as the day. Which is weird since we already know that this power is only augmented by their disciplined training but Umay shows early signs of the power. There is really a reason why they call her mother I suppose. Anyway, that’s it for now. I’m out.”

-Archaeologist Edith Gisa’s voice record

left for her supervisor Arch-archaeologist Pendragon Tuğrel

ULAKLAR/ULAKS

After enduring many hardships, humanity understood whatever they had to do, they had to have some degree of connection and secrecy between camps to make their revolution successful. In the winter of 1293, the boy at his 8 who would be the first ulak named Markut, got caught when stealing a piece of bread that will be served to Sütana Nur. Nur decided boy’s tongue will be cut as the decree of his crime. It was rather a controversial decision to punish a boy just because he wanted to end his hunger. She preached how crime should be even undesirable to man and if they let boys go unpunished, it will eventually rise and lead to chaos. Some people agreed, others said that it was too harsh of a punishment. After ranting for hours, nobody was brave enough to openly defy Nur, as her authority was a cold, unbreakable one and to her luck, there was no other Sütana in the yurt at that time. Even her koca was unable to convince her otherwise.

Then she concluded the decree with one sentence: I see clearly in the waters where your eyes are blurred.

Thus, what was said, was said. The verdict was given and boy’s tongue was cut. After that day, Nur spoke no further on the issue. Although, she seldom ordered the boy to be brought to her presence. Some thought it was Nur’s mercy and pity for the boy led her to check on him. In a sense, it was the truth. Nur really cared for the boy, she was the one who wet-nursed him, nurtured him. She was the one who gave him his blood, flesh and bone. For some time, Markut hated Nur and didn’t want to see her or talk to her but eventually, conditions softened. They talked, as mother and child. At least Nur talked, and Markut listened, and at best, he hummed. He hummed so beautifully, so elegant as if he sang songs with his vocal cords. The time he turned 13, he was known as Markut the Sparrow as his humming was a regular thing and he was a feisty one. He was like a lotus in a swamp for a place like a camp. Among all the misery and hunger they suffered, he somehow managed to hum and sing.

Ironically, conditions went downhill for Markut when he is a teenager. At 14 he lost his mother. At 15, he lost his father and the girl she loved dearly is killed in front of his eyes. Karaneme, of course, got away with it. He grew cynical over time and he developed an unmatched hatred against the flesh-sculptors. Meantime, his love for Nur was also unmatched, she was there at his lowest and highest since his punishment.

One night when they were engaging in a conversation as a blind mother and mute son, Nur revealed a secret to him while tears dropped from her bottomless eyes. It was the same karaneme that killed his girlfriend, also killed his father and mother. How Nur exactly ended up holding this knowledge remained a mystery for him, but he still believed her. He, in a moment of rage, went for it and struck karaneme which was disguising himself as a seven-year-old. After hitting, neme's true form was revealed. Seeing this, azaps lynched it and hung it upon a dead tree from creature's neck. Body remained there as a show of strength and punishment. Markut watched it for hours and days until the regulation.

The tree was rotten from its roots, making it black and twisted in unholy angles, It was looking like a burnt piece of copper wire rather than a tree. It was divided to two big black boughs, neme was hanged on the left one two days ago, the creature's neck was indented by a thick rope, leaving a deep groove. The boy examined the groove, how the rot was taking root in the neck, how it was walking to the so-called face and body. Markut saw another body hanged on the right one, it was his own but the body was not 16 anymore, it was beyond an age. It was an ever-decaying clump of matter. Two cadavers talked to each other under the full-moon.

"You are only a man." said neme, with disgust.

"That is all I need to be." answered Markut.

"You are only a boy." said neme.

"That is I will ever be." answered Markut.

"You are a shame. To your mother, to your father and to your darling." said neme.

"Shame, I will carry with care." answered Markut.

"You are only a burden." said neme the last.

"That, I can carry." answered Markut the last.

Finally, in the morning of the regulation day, Nur called for the boy one last time. Urged him to leave the camps, using the tunnels beneath. Markut resisted, grumping and stomping his feet to the ground with anger. He wanted vengeance, and more than vengeance, he wanted justice. Although, both was mixed in his mind at some point while he was watching the neme for days. Last thing he had seen was blurring his mind and thoughts? Was it real? Was Markut going to die and make that conversation while he was hanged? After eight years, Nur uttered the words again;

"I see clearly in the waters where your eyes are blurred."

Quick Start Guide

To create your character use the following steps by order:

1. Determine your ability scores
2. Choose your Class and Tribe
3. Calculate your HP , AC and Evasion scores
4. Choose or randomly determine equipment

That's it! Now, grab the character sheet from the end and write it down to play.

ABILITY SCORES

A character is defined by broad terms of their six ability scores. For character creation you can roll 3d6 for each ability listed or you can start your points at 8 then buy ability points with 27 points for starting. For each score there is a modifier attach to it. This will determine your rolls outcome in play, so choose carefully which ability you want to use. The ability scores are the following:

- Might: Represents how physically strong your character is.
- Finesse: Represents how dexterous your character is.
- Toughness: Represents how physically tough your character is.
- Willpower: Represents how tough your mind is.
- Mind: Represents how vast and capable your mind is.
- Presence: Represents how much charismatic or capable you're socially.

Each ability represents your character to do ANYTHING! Could be simple as jumping or solving a puzzle to something more harsh. With each score your character differs from your run of the mill citizen to superhuman like abilities. So choose carefully for what you want to play as.

As an example let say the following:

All your ability scores are 8 and you have 27 points to distribute. Our character in mind is a muscle head so his might and toughness should be high as it can. Lets give the character might of 15 and toughness of 14. That's 16 (9+7) points used. Then lets distribute the rest of them to make it more balanced. For finesse lets give 13, willpower of 10, presence of 10 and mind of 10. That makes up in total 11 (5+2+2+2) points used. Which makes 27 points being used to make the character.

Table 1-1: Ability Score & Modifiers

Score	Modifier
1	-5
2-3	-4
4-5	-3
6-7	-2
8-9	-1
10-11	+0
12-13	+1
14-15	+2
16-17	+3
18-19	+4
20-21	+5
22-23	+6
24-25	+7
26-27	+8
28-29	+9
30	+10

Table 1-2: Ability Score Point Cost

Score	Cost
8	0
9	1
10	2
11	3
12	4
13	5
14	7
15	9
16	10
17	13
18	16

LEVEL 1

All characters start at level 1 and with a class plus a tribe. Most will die out before even be able to make a difference in their lives and die alone, unknown. The lucky ones, the ones who have struggled and survived will gain power beyond their dreams. Get the following if you have chosen a class and a tribe:

- HP = Might * Current Level
- Speed = 10ft (around 6 of 1x1 cm squares in all direction)
- AC = 10 + Current Level
- Evasion = 10 + Finesse Modifier
- 60 gold
- One randomly chosen or selected piece of equipment (see table '2')
- Based on the selected Tribe:
 - Possession of a extra weapon
 - Possession of some hold item

STRUGGLE

Every time you fail at a roll where there is a stake or is a important moment, you can struggle. To struggle, you start the roll at d2 (token) + willpower modifier for box#1 then for each box the die to roll gradually increase (d2(token)/d4/d6/d8/d10/d12). If successful the player can change the moment of their failure to a struggled success (a half success with consequence). Gm will choose when you should roll this however you can ask if you think its important to roll.

If successful mark the struggle bar for 1(one) box. If you're unsuccessful with the roll, face the consequence of your struggle with out your half success and be ready to go frenzy for a brief moment.

If the struggle bar has been filled you roll a d12 + willpower modifier to determine whatever you go frenzy as whole or come back to your senses. If you do come back to your senses, you have struggled enough for the session or the game.

CONSEQUENCES

To Struggle means to sacrifice something in return hence consequence of your action. Every time you use a struggle point write down a consequence with your DM supervising it. If the consequence is minor rest would be enough to revert back but if its major, your DM will have the say so to when it can be reverted.

THE STRUGGLED

Classes represents what your character has been trained for, talented at or both. These people have struggled all their lives from well just being alive and they are just trying to survive but to survive they had to make something of themselves, something useful. So they became STRUGGLED. These are the following classes for this this starter and the game:

- ULAK

Ulak's represent the humanity's messenger, the last connection to the other people and the outside world. However these people are not able to talk. They cut their vocal cords to make them unable to utter any words and instead of words they hum.

"They see clearly in the waters where your eyes are blurred and echo the world to be heard."

To them the sacrifice of words is worth the opportunity to be heard, to sing, to outcry the rebellion in themselves.

- EXERTED

The exerted are representatives of will and diligence, their work created the architectural marvel that we see today. They are the pioneers of what hard work would look like but to become a symbol of this they sacrifice their souls. A ritual is conducted via "Sütana" to make contact with a will unlike other to give the exerted's soul to it. When a human is selling their soul are they even a human anymore or are they just mindless beast perhaps even emotionless robots.

"Thou shall sell their humanity and future to betterment of a another, such that it will create only the will of their work"

However it begs the question when you look at the work does it contain the will anymore?

- SCION

What happens when ancient beings, ancestors of the unknown has children of the unknown, raised by themselves taught by themselves, Struggled by themselves. These people are Struggled and touched the unknown all their lives, shaped by it. They don't need to do some petty ritual to gain or control anything when it already whispered in their ears long before they were ever born hence scion's possessing almost infinite possibilities, have very big shortcomings of rage, pride, greed etc. Scion's are the biggest hurdle when it comes to the rebellion but if they learn to overcome it they will most likely be the ones to save us.

EQUIPMENT

Table 2-1: Essentials List

At level 1 you can either roll a d20 or choose with your money (depends on the dm).

Roll	Item	Cost
1	Backpack	2 gold
2	Candle	1 gold
3	Chalk, 1 piece	30 gold
4	Crowbar	2 gold
5	Flask, empty	3 gold
6	Grappling hook	1 gold
7	Flint & steel	15 gold
8	Hammer, small	5 gold
9	Lantern	10 gold
10	Mirror, hand-sized	10 gold
11	Oil, 1 flask*	2 gold
12	Rations, per day	5 gold
13	Rope, 50ft	25 gold
14	Torch	1 gold
15	Thieves' tools	25 gold
16	Pole, 10ft	15 gold
17	Spyglass	30 gold
18	Tarot cards	15 gold
19	Herbs, per basket	10 gold
20	Sack	8 gold

When ignited and thrown, oil causes 1d6 damage plus fire (DC 10 save vs. Reflex to put out or suffer additional 1d6 damage each round). One flask of oil burns for 6 hours in a lantern.*

Table 2-3: Ammunition List

Ammunition	Quantity	Cost in gold
Arrows	20	5
Arrow, silver-tipped	1	5
Quarrels	30	10
Sling stones	30	1

Table 2-2: Weapons List

At level 1 you can either roll a d20 or choose with your money (depends on the dm).

Weapon	Damage	Range	Cost in gold
Battleaxe*	1d8	—	7
Blackjack	1d3	—	3
Club	1d4	—	3
Crossbow*	1d6	80/160/240	30
Dagger	1d4	10/20/30	3
Dart	1d4	20/40/60	5
Flail	1d6	—	6
Handaxe	1d6	10/20/30	4
Javelin	1d6	30/60/90	1
Longbow*	1d6	70/140/210	40
Longsword	1d8	—	10
Mace	1d6	—	5
Polearm*	1d10	—	7
Shortbow*	1d6	50/100/150	25
Short sword	1d6	—	7
Sling	1d4	40/80/160	2
Spear	1d8	—	3
Staff	1d4	—	5
Two-handed sword*	1d10	—	15
Warhammer	1d6	—	5

Two-handed weapon. Characters using two-handed weapons suffer a -4 penalty to initiative checks.*

Strength damage bonus applies with this weapon at close range only. Strength penalties apply at all ranges.*

Damage dealt is always subdual damage.

MONSTERS

As the Storyteller, you have a vast array of resources available to you make the game exciting and fun for the players and monsters are the top of the list. A monster is defined as any creature that can be interacted with potentially fought and killed. This section presents a wide selection of ready to play monsters. Each description uses a standardized format that explains a monster's capabilities. Guidelines for understanding the information is found below.

- STATISTICS

...

DICTIONARY

neme(s): how shapeshifters name themselves

karaneme(s): what humans call nemes, the prefix kara- literally means "black", connoting "illness, accursedness" dâr'ül-harb: land of war zaman-ı harb: time of war

yurt: "home" for humans, what neme calls "camp" koca: literally means "husband" although it is used only for a sûtana's husband.

sûtana/sûtanne: literally means "wetnurse"; as a member of the sûtanalık constitution: milk-mother sûtanalık: literally means "wet-nursing", not the verb form but noun, later constitutionalized as Sûtanalık: which can be translated as The Motherhood of Milk.

kızı: daughter of. ex. Gisa kızı Edith: Edith, daughter of Gisa oğlu: son of. ex. Mustafa oğlu Gökhan: Gökhan, son of Mustafa

The Struggle's Character Sheet

Might	Modifier:
Finesse	Modifier:
Toughness	Modifier:
Willpower	Modifier:
Mind	Modifier:
Presence	Modifier:

Name	Title
Tribes	Speed
Class	Level
AC	XP
HP
Evasion

Consequences

Equipment

Notes